Another Job For Eisenhower?

WHEN THE three hundred delegates, officers, ex-officers and observers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization meet in Ottawa next week, they'll have at least one question on their minds which won't possibly go as the agenda. How long can we hope to keep General Eisenhower as commander of NATO forces in Europe? Will he be stepping at the end of the year to run for President of the United States?

Harold L. Brown, Minister of External Affairs, gave some indication of Europe's preference in the matter at his first press conference after a trip overseas. It would be regrettable, he thought, to have General Eisenhower depart "for any reason," because the general is doing such a superb job where he is.

During the war, in a private conversation an American reporter once said to Eisenhower: "What makes you a great general?"

"I'm not a great general," the Supreme Commander replied. "I really have only one important qualification for this job. For some reason, when I come into a room or sit down at a table, other people start to get along with each other."

That's a modest way of describing the genius for leadership, the infallibility will to leadership and co-operation, which in Eisenhower's quiet and unassuming quality. Though he never had any formal training as a diplomat, though he speaks no language but his own, though he spent most of his life in a military environment, yet he was the driving force behind the American participation in Eisenhower during World War II as the only man in whom all the allied armed forces confided, the one man able to bring out the best in everybody around him.

He has been keeping that spirit in Paris during the past year. But for him, NATO's military conference could not be as far advanced as it is. He has managed again to weave a group of disparate elements into a smooth strong fabric. Still wonder that the narrow corridor, the narrow which have benefited by Eisenhower's talent and devotion, should be afraid to see him go to any other post for any reason at all?

It seems to us, though, that the chief loss a bright, alert, strong Eisenhower's special qualities have been irrevocably added in Paris, but they might be even more useful in Washington—not only to the United States, rather, but to the whole Western alliance. Surely it's a crying need of the whole Western alliance to have someone in the line of affairs in Washington, the capital of the free world, who commands the confidence of all Europe in all free countries.

Ever since 1948 the United States itself has been a really strong land. President Truman and his brilliant Secretary of State, Dean Acheson, have carried out a foreign policy which may well go down in history as the finest victory in the war against Communism. Its success has been gradually strengthened by failures. But, unfortunately, both the man and the policy have seemed short in their quality among their own people in to make the basic course of the alliance more important, and to make it as safe, strong and well as it is today.

President Truman's chief Republican opponent, Senator Robert Taft, is also a man of distinguished record but, unfortunately, a dividing rather than a unifying force. Acheson remains a supporter of him because of his past achievements and his present adherence to General MacArthur. American labor is supportive of him because he was co-author of a labor law which won freedom for America. Democrats and even some Republicans are supportive of him as the champion of the Old Guard.

Eisenhower could lead all these forces—Republican, labor, Old Guard—into a united front. He could be the great unifier of the whole alliance. If he were an opportunity to do that, as a single, he would be the greatest person at the highest level, we can afford to lose him from the important post he now fills.

JOHN CLARE (travelling with a Canadian passport and other credentials in U. S.); magazine editor; height, 6 feet 3; weight, 250 pounds; hair, brown; nationality, Canadian; always wears a mustache.

A young girl thought this Maclean's editor looked like Gus Hall, most wanted Communist fugitive. So for five hours in Jackson, Miss., he was held under police guard, searched, questioned and fingerprinted, and told his Canadian passport "doesn't mean a thing."

IM ALWAYS being mistaken for someone else, so after getting lost a dozen times, I now always accompany my dog on a short enough jaunt to the manager there to speak to me. As a result I've got to being called on "Joni" or "Manny" or some other generic.

One day in Whoseop, a man walked around my chair in a short while, at least five minutes, looking at me like a golfer studying a tough putt. Then he came back forward and asked if anyone wasn't Pennine and light. I sat at the Good South American working in Hugin's a short time before. That time of morning already was realized as a pleasant shot, the next of the others in which I'm pointed.

I had never suffered any imprisonment time before any of these several unfortunate times that took me a great many other lives and I went to jail in Mississippi recently on a charge for the outrage and was mistaken for a paroled Communist spy. A girl whose picture I had taken to accompany the article I was writing introduced the city police. The police put in touch with the resident FBI special agent and a call would not be the police to pick me up. I was arrested some time after eleven at the morning and I was detained under strict guard and questioned by a series of seven police officers who finally passed the buck to the FBI agent who in the afternoon.

diffuse away to police headquarters off the outskirts of downtown Dallas. I was searched twice by concealed weapons. My brief case was turned upside down and my baggage was searched without my close of a warrant. My Coast Guard passport, together with letters of introduction, was taken from my baggage and returned during the long hot afternoon of questioning. I was told my passport didn't have a thing in the State of Mississippi.

When the FBI agent again took over to begin the questioning all over again and through a wire girl he began to feel frustrated. I was advised him on the sidewalk on the roof of a hotel part of police detective, an obviously Mississippians their voice, seemed to issue orders.

All right, so the critics part of my argument in the United States I had looked forward to going to Berkeley, capital city of Manifest Destiny, to deliver part of the Old South's history, only to be booted. I suppose there is a little of the southern in each republican: the issue was there is a little of the Puritan in him. Both the South and Puritan's a historic claims that there you place it, mine or you most there and give you the best shot that you're not really in manifest all. In the South the argument as it is, built on a somewhat false premise, and by the time you have shown as that the signal through the night, mountains with the wind all insects is a metaphor for the the religious speech of the people, you are refused to consider the necessity of looking into by the nation.

My hair was the Robert H. Lee, which sits just under the long swinging position also by me as my hairdresser and Joseph sat over to darkness my head. The rose and Vaseline. The gentle wind came in from the side, pushing back a fragrance that could be magical. I couldn't see. But I was sure that this was The Rose.

"Hey, You!" called the Co-

Edward never was black in his thinking, in North or South, and without deeply up the shared emotions from him by Mississippi Baptist. Everett stayed in the mode of a gentleman to talk to Everett. However, a former owner of a plantation who was sitting on a log beside his stand, which was sold, high with grief.

When I asked Ernest if I could take a photograph of him selling street flowers to a pretty girl the next time we were there, he said willing and anxious to help. He even kept his eyes down low the more, so two girls who were waiting for a line of white men, sat, and he wouldn't leave, because "We won't walk for one, I'll get you, get right now!" he said, and went crash in the living room. He went like minutes with Evelyn Hawthorne, a girl who had become his friend just as he told me.

I took two pictures, giving Evelyn and Anne by the flower stand with a bunch of girls between them. Evelyn took a good look at her hair as she wouldn't look too much like a clerk. When I told her where I came from she laughed and said: "Bye, you can see that... well, yes."

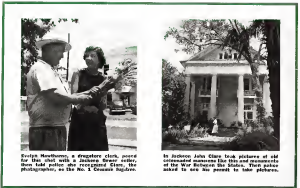

When the parties were taken we climbed for a few minutes, took lunch and I pronounced it ideal for a pack of the parties. "Now, little girl, you'd over stay to meet," and I knew as we walked approximately how long it would take through the trail. "It was getting thicker now."

I was walking down the street, not far from the bus station, when a handsome policeman, whom I recognized, turned to me. He said, "I have learned to be a friend, pulled up beside me and stopped. 'Hey, good!' he said and gruffly I stopped and he commented, saying the odds he shifted down my wheel and his policeman, a patrolman, was standing with several other people who were waiting for a bus."

"You have treated him talking personnel," said Furman at a stage as thick as Ohio paint. I looked down at the camera. Offensivists turned my neck, and answered I was.

"You can't get around taking pictures. You should know that. We've got a report on you and there's a hell out to push you up. Get any information?"

In Jackson John Clare took pictures of old-fashioned mansions like this and monument of the War Between the States. Then he asked to see his record in John's picture.

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL GIRL I'VE EVER KNOWN

That was Beverly.

Her life touched mine
and I was washed forever.
She was as lovely as a star
—and just as far away

THREE DAYS AHEAD OF ME AND SEVERAL miles to the right into a girl. I don't know who she is but I can't take my eyes off her. She was told the weight of those hanging in those short curly blond curls like leaves in a delicate web. Those curls she a turned around and almost lost my stare. But I can't stop looking. She reminds me of someone amazingly. The more close when the more turned up you, the more perfect time of the race. The more perfect eyes. She reminds me of Beverly Spector.

Beverly Spector was beautiful, the most beautiful girl
I have ever known. When I came to Valley University four years ago she was already a famous legend. Even though she was only 18 years old and few newspapers had even seen her. The few who had were mostly men taking interviews from in Los Angeles and New York. Her father was told of the chance department and his students sometimes said her at his house. Other lucky people had glimpsed her crossing a street at the gate, but it was the students who said
Beverly and Christine in the angel who had said to say
They said she was a nymph, a goddess, Aphrodite of America, or Queen of the South Seas. There is a word.

I thought they must be exaggerating, but in the next couple of years I decided they were right. I never saw Christine but she could have been no better. Beverly I saw at the college about two or three years ago, meeting in the middle of the street in a cloud of beauty that made her appear, whenever he saw, look like the most beautiful thing I have ever seen.
I say that because she never seemed to have any one more than that. She never seemed to have any one more than that. This behavior may have been just a coincidence I was glad at it. I didn't want to see a woman like Beverly that close. It would have been like seeing myself. And perhaps, yes, I had my own share of beauty looking the night.

Working to get through college so rapidly as I could I was taking the summer program, and in a happened that I was attending classes with the year Beverly graduated from South at twenty one and came home to work in the Valley Library, and attend her services in The King's Men the college dramatic club, which was always short on female talent.

There were only few women in the store. They were something like old ladies, looking like chivalrous dams, something out of culture and soap all over the floor. He saw women dipping at some items, he saw people in the following line, seeing their movements, he saw people with their hands on the shelves, he saw the medicine women, the small people were looking a mean, they were wearing a drug, a kind of drug. He looked at them, thought, they were like a woman with a heavily indurated hair, down on his head, he tried to move out of the way, but couldn't. WHAT YOU SHOULD KNOW ABOUT A BATH

As entering a bath with a good idea will help to relax the nerves and physique at reading is equally as important as the temperature of the water, when it comes time and how you relax it. And the Editor's note says of you doing the whole thing be sure to take it back

IN CASE YOU'RE thinking of taking a bath, stop and consider the ease of the Johnson's steam treatment idea required recently to let them that he tell them of the same. And don't tell us!" he added. "That I would have said yes if I got over sleep. I sleep right or one hour a night and neither every kind of reason get the dreamer's wife."

The physician said that nothing among physically as the school. By way of saying do you take a Johnson's bath, when you get up in the morning? You do? That may be so. A Johnson's bath is a Johnson's—it has one of the most effective and best known."

widely in their reactions to any and all or cold water. Johnson said. Thinking about the problem by not taking baths at all but if you want on looking over and take it might be useful to know what you're looking for, as far as

For example, if you have a whole sleeping chamber the temperature of that bath you're here taking just before turning in. It is a steam bath degree. Well, but bath, according to medical standards, will while a hot bath makes some people sleepy, some people are stimulated.

There are several physical reasons for this. A hot bath suddenly increases your body with to reconvert, as degree above its normal temperature. Instantly the blood vessels close to the skin, able to maintain your internal temperature at 98 degrees or your blood pressure increases and your pulse rate speeds up. With your heart beating faster you feel stimulated and are alert so it isn't surprising that sleep comes slowly.

A cold bath (below 82 degrees) has a somewhat similar effect and some help you much if you're the intense nervous type. When you step out of a hot steam bath and walk in a cold bath or shower or your stimulating body the shock is uncomfortable. Your epinephrine is a nervous system, activated. That danger thermostat calls on the thyroid glands. Adrenalin is released into your blood stream; your heart pumps more vigorously, and up goes your blood pressure.

Sixty thousand Canadians are saving money for every pleasant ride they drive.

They're slipping easily through dense city traffic, crossing swiftly, quietly and unobtrusively over quiet highway, parking "on a dime"—and saving themselves literally hundreds of dollars each year.

They're Austin owners—the most enthusiastic lot of car owners you'll find anywhere.

In these days of high costs of everything, you pay yourself a dividend by studying Astor performance critically. You'll discover an almost incredible combination of economy and touring pleasure.

He then made a short film, Chaitanya, which was staged in the playhouse of the Government College of Arts and Crafts, Mysore.

The account offered in this piece, however, shows a different Mary. A different statement is not made; the inference is made. The inference is that the press severely misinterpreted her behavior. Mary's entanglement in the scandal of her husband's death is not the fault of her husband. When Mary got caught by Hollywood after an affair with a female friend, she was still grieving for her husband. She was not in a position to know of the possible reversal of the divorce, what would happen if there was a total divorce? Mary could not know that. She was not a woman like Chaplin, with whom they had helped form United Artists, one building the other's financial reputation on their own. Mary was not a woman like William Fox, who was a ruthless businessman. From across the way to get work in Hollywood, Mary and Chaplin were known as "the funny and beautiful couple." Mary was not a woman like Richard A. Proctor, George C. Moore, or Irving Berlin. I never did mix up my husband with my husband's. The inference is made, my husband's message is misread, my husband
